The website

If you haven't been out to the Village Playhouse website lately, go and take a look. (www.villageplayhouse.org) Not only does it now contain information on current VPW activities, but some of our history is now online as well. There is history for 21 years of the Original One Act Festival (But wait, you say, haven't there been 24 years of festival?? More on that in a minute, the twelve AACTFest productions and the 2008-09 season. And as time goes on, more and more shows from previous seasons will be available.

These web pages are the culmination of almost a year and a half of data gathering and preparation. This is a continuing process as we uncover and digitize more and more items. For most of our shows (especially the earlier years) we're limited to mostly programs and cast lists. So if you have any old show photos, newspaper clippings or other memorabilia that can be digitized, we'd love to have it. If you have the ability to scan items into files and e-mail them that is more than fine. If you don't have the ability to scan things, please consider letting us borrow the hardcopy long enough to scan it ourselves. We promise to treat your items with respect and return them. Files or inquiries can be sent to webmaster@villageplayhouse.org. Going back to why there are three years of the One Act Festival history missing. We've discovered that there are certain spots in the Village Playhouse's thirty year history that we have little or no information for. This is where we really need your help. Here is a list of shows that we have no information on. If you have anything stuck away in a drawer or scrapbook on these shows, please share it with us. Or if you're looking through the history web pages and notice a missing piece of information that you have, please let us know.

So, watch the website for VPW's past, present, and future activities. And if you have any suggestions feel free to drop a note to webmaster@villageplayhouse.org
